PROFESSOR WINS AND LOOSES IN FIGHT WITH POLECAT

Berkeley, Cal., Jan. 2.—Prof. T. O. Hines of the Chemistry department of the University of California, is living the life of a recluse today. Worse than that, he is carefully avoided by his friends, to the extent even that when he goes down the street, everybody else hastily crosses to the other side.

The reason of all of which is, not that Professor Hines is morose by nature or at all inclined to live the life of a hermit, but that he engaged in battle with a polecat in the library of the faculty club on the campus.

Professor Hines emerged victorious from the fray in that the polecat is dead, done to death by a dose of chloroform. But his memory lives, and probably will live for many odorous days. Death may have no sting, but in the case of polecat it certainly has an odor, which is not that of atar of roses.
